Air pollution is the biggest environmental health risk of the current time. Airborne pollutants are responsible for about one-third of deaths from stroke, chronic respiratory disease, and lung cancer, as well as one-quarter of deaths from heart attack. Air pollution is also fundamentally altering the climate, with profound impacts on the health of the planet.

Though India has never denied the serious health implication of air pollution and called it one of the triggering factors for respiratory ailments and associated diseases, it does not endorse international studies, including those from the WHO, arguing that these estimates are based on “models, simulations and extrapolations”.
